Portfolio Commentary

The AIM IHT Dividend Portfolio recorded a total return of -4.1% in August. In comparison, the benchmark Numis Alternative Markets Index also registered a total return of -2.3% over the same period. Underlying portfolio returns for individual clients will vary depending on the timing of their investment.

The best performing stock in August was Belvoir, which registered a total return of +14.7%. Belvoir released its interim results during the period, highlighting a strong performance in the first half of the year, demonstrating its resilient business model and the ability to invest in acquisitions financed by the strong cash flow generated. The management team also announced a 25% increase in dividends, which further demonstrates their confidence in the business.

The worst performing stock was NWF, which registered a total return of -17.0%. NWF released a positive set of full-year 2023 results, reporting strong performance across all divisions, two successful acquisitions, and a healthy balance sheet. This was despite facing inflationary and cost of living challenges. However, the company's share price subsequently suffered due to the departure of its CEO of 15 years and increased selling pressure.
